A Message From The Steering Committee

Last month the Steering Committee sent out a survey to get your opinion on several important issues that will affect future directions of SACWN. As we go to print in mid March, over 150 surveys have been returned. We thank you for taking the time to respond to the survey. We are working to tabulate the responses and will report back to you in the May Newsletter.

SACWN is in need of volunteers to help with planning future programs and dances. Please call Linda at 486-8985 and let us know if you are interested.

The issue of Breast Cancer is an important health issue especially in our lesbian community. SACWN is working with other women's groups to help plan the Demonstration Against Breast Cancer May 12th from 2 to 4 p.m. at the west steps of the Capitol. If you would like to volunteer call me at 451-1682. At our March event, SACWN members contributed $85 towards helping with the costs to put on this demonstration. In a related note, SACWN sadly reports that one of our past performers, Pat Bond, died this year of cancer. This is just one example of how cancer is taking the lives of many of our sisters. SACWN urges you to educate yourself about breast cancer and participate in your health care.

Finally, SACWN is pleased to print the first "Coming Out" story we have received from the membership. We look forward to receiving more stories in the future.

Emotions and Your Health
A Balancing Act . . .

by Sandra Warne, M.A.

TO LOVE AND BE LOVED

When we begin to love someone, everything is new and sparkling. Our tendency is to try to hold onto the sparkle, to structure it, because we are afraid of losing it. Ari Kiev, M.D., a psychiatrist and author of Active Loving, explains how the marvelous spontaniety of love turns into the drudgery of a relationship full of expectations and demands. The harder we try to hold on, the faster we move toward destruction of the relationship. To understand why this is, we must first learn that love is the total acceptance of another person. It is a relationship without shoulds or shouldn'ts. When we are in love we accept.

Loving with expectations is love that is conditional. If we need the other person's love to feel good about ourselves we cling to our lover out of desperation. And if we give love out of fear, constantly worried that our partner might stop loving us, this isn't love, it's dependency with little joy or happiness in it.

What destroys relationships is dishonesty, lack of open communication and not loving ourselves. If we don't love ourselves, and another person says, "I love you," we think "I don't deserve it" or "I don't love me, therefore, how can I respect someone who does?" This of course brings us to the source of our own selflessness . . . our family of origin.

Our childhood wounds often underlie relationship problems. How can we love and accept someone else if we don't love and accept ourselves? If our family rewarded us for our "achievements," or when we were "good girls," or when we "looked pretty," they placed conditions on their love and acceptance of us. Therefore we come to do the same with ourselves and the people we pursue. The double-bind surfaces when we discover that we choose relationships based on the negative and positive qualities of the people that raised us. We then re-enact our childhood patterns and expectations for unconditional love and wonder why we don't receive it.

In order to lay the foundation for a lasting relationship we must begin the process of "self-work." As we begin to learn to accept ourselves, we will be more accepting of our partners, and also become more loving people. Creating self love and respect is only solving half of the problem. Every partnership consists of two "wounded children." So, although it's a start, becoming well and wonderful yourself is just a good beginning. The next step involves a commitment between you and your partner to develop a "conscious loving relationship." This means a relationship with more realistic perceptions of one another. One where you communicate your needs and desires, become more intentional with one another, value each other as you have learned to value yourself, embrace and look at your own dark side, learn techniques to satisfy your own basic needs and desires and finally accept the difficulty of creating a loving partnership. Couples striving to achieve mature love and partnership can enhance their relationship through couples counseling, communication workshops and the aid of good self-help books.

SUCCESSFUL SACWNITES

SACWN is proud to note that two SACWN members, Stacey Selmants and Emma Childers, have been appointed to serve on the Police/Sheriff Liaison Committee of the Lesbian and Gay Town Council. Emma, who became a new member this month, was also appointed Co-chair.

After 10 years in private practice, SACWN member Phyllis Kaufman returned to school to get her Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology and graduated as the Valedictorian of her class! She currently has a private practice and works half-time for the California Department of Corrections, assigned to the three HIV/AIDS wings at the Correctional Medical Facility in Vacaville.

Several successes have come to SACWN member Roxanne Hardenburgh who owns Capital Bookkeeping and Tax Service. She has moved her office from Roseville to Citrus Heights doubling her space and finds herself frequently sought after to teach educational seminars on financial topics for the YWCA and the Learning Exchange. A most recent honor was being chosen as Treasurer for the YWCA Board.

Coming Out Story

Our First Kiss . . .

The year was 1960 when I escaped a bad marriage in Portland to enter a Bay Area art school. Isolated, I found myself the only female sculpture major there, and worse yet, the only woman in the world who kept falling in love with other women!

Lesbian literature came in the form of hidden erotic paperbacks then, but one of them found me. Imagine my delight to learn that there were others like me out there somewhere. Some had even organized into a group called Daughters of Bilitis and published a newsletter called The Ladder.

Armed with such literary support, and a few evening visits to a tiny Pacific Street "women's" bar, I found the nerve to tell a "straight" classmate (the object of my affection): "You'd better quit verbally trashing 'dykes and queers' if you want us to remain friends because you're talking about me!"

I actually said that! She looked as shocked as I felt and I knew she'd be out of my life and telling the whole world what I'd said. My paranoia was painful, but short-lived, for not long after that we exchanged our first kiss, and then a romance that became a committed partnership. The women in the bars used to ask "Who's butch and who's fem?" But that's another story.

Phyllis

Note: The Newsletter staff thanks Phyllis for telling us her "coming out" story. We wanna hear your story!

"DIRECT" Your Attention!!!

It's been two years since the publishing of our SACWN Directory, and SACWN has undergone considerable growth since that time. We'd like to update the Directory so it will remain useful to our subscribers and a valuable tool to aid in networking.

We invite you to be a part of that directory. The directory will be comprised of "white pages" which will alphabetically list members who wish to be listed, and "lavender pages" which will focus on professional and business services of our subscribers. All listings will be SACWN subscribers and no names will be listed without the permission of the subscriber.

If you'd like to list yourself in the new directory, which is targeted for publication this fall, you may fill out a directory form at the HUB or call the SACWN number (486-8985) and leave your name and phone number so that someone can get back to you.

If you would like to advertise your business in the directory, again call and leave your number so we can contact you about advertising rates.

One final note — the last directory was made available for members to purchase, due to the high costs of developing and printing. We will do our best to keep costs down as much as we can this time in order to provide the directory free to our subscribers, or at least for a very minimal fee (e.g. $1.00).

PLEASE PRINT ONLY THE INFO. YOU WANT LISTED IN THE SACWN DIRECTORY:

Name _____

Address _____

Phone Home (_____) _____ Work (_____) _____

Occupation _____

(If you would like to be listed in the SACWN Directory, please send this form to SACWN or bring it to the next event.)

DIRECTORY BIDS

The Networking Committee of SACWN is currently in the process of revising and updating the SACWN directory, with plans for distribution of the new directory in the fall. We are now soliciting bids for typesetting and printing of the directory. If you and/or your business are interested in presenting a bid, please call 451-9691 for more information.

Breast Cancer Update

by Trisha Harper

The statistics are staggering: 44,000 women died of breast cancer in 1990; 150,000 new cases of female breast cancer were diagnosed last year; one of every ten women in the United States will be diagnosed with breast cancer at some point in her life. There is no known cure for breast cancer.

Breast cancer is an unpredictable disease; while there are risk categories established, the medical community clarifies that no woman is risk-free. The American Cancer Society and the National Cancer Institute urge women to follow a prevention/early detection program that begins in a woman's early twenties and continues throughout her life.

Cancer begins with an abnormal change and uncontrolled growth of cells, or the development of tumors. These tumors are either benign (non-cancerous) or malignant (cancerous). In these early stages cancer cells are usually localized, or remain where they originated. As it develops, the cancer then may metastasize, or spread to neighboring organs or cells. Lymph nodes may limit cancerous growth to a specific region of the body. Left untreated, however, the cancer is likely to spread to the advanced stage, or what is called distant metastases.

The Lesbian community is notoriously lax in our preventive health care habits. There seems to be a sense of immunity to disease that lulls us into a false sense of security. Lesbians and Nuns are two groups that rarely go to doctors for regular pap smears or check-ups. The medical community certainly has not addressed an education/prevention campaign to the Lesbian and Bisexual women's community. Add the discomfort many of us feel with the medical community and their lack of responsiveness to the needs of women, and we are left with an alarming lack of preventive care taken by our community.

By following the preventive measures outlined below we take the steps necessary to increase our chances for early breast cancer detection and eradication.

The American Cancer Society recommends a three-point plan of preventive action to be developed by women in cooperation with our doctors:

A Clinical Breast Exam (CBE) is performed by a doctor or health practitioner as part of a regular health check-up. This entails a visual inspection of the breasts, followed by a thorough manual inspection of the breasts, chest and armpits. CBE is recommended every three years for women aged 20-39, and yearly for women aged 40 and older.

A mammogram will further increase your chances for early detection. It is a low-dose x-ray of the breast that creates an image of breast tissue. The procedure requires the technician to flatten the breast to ensure the clearest picture, so for some women it is uncomfortable. Studies show that chances for early detection are increased by as much as 40% by mammography alone, which may well outweigh the discomfort. A single, baseline mammogram is recommended for women between the ages of 35 and 39. Women aged 40-49 should get a screening mammogram every one to two years, and women over age 50, yearly.

All women over twenty years of age are encouraged to perform a Breast Self-Examination (BSE) once monthly, when the breasts are the least tender. Through regular self-examination, cancer symptoms can be detected between scheduled CBE and mammography appointments. It is imperative that we familiarize ourselves with our bodies. Regular BSE's will make detection of changes in our breasts far more likely. Ask your doctor, or write to the American Cancer Society for Breast Self-Examination instructions.

It is time we take it upon ourselves to educate the lesbian and bisexual women's community about breast cancer early detection and prevention. Go to your doctor and discuss a program that will suit you; if you do not have a doctor, ask other women if they can recommend a physician they trust, or call the American Cancer Society for a referral.

(Special thanks to the American Cancer Society and Victor Amira, M.D., for research materials).

We're curious. Where are the other 50 SACWN women in their 20s? We're having a potluck on Saturday, April 13, at 7:00 p.m. We invite you to attend for some fun and networking. Call Tina, 456-1913, or Michele, 447-3989 for directions and more info.

WOMEN WHO JOG TOO MUCH

Are you interested in getting together Saturday mornings for an informal workout? This is not another group to join, just fun. Call Irene, 923-2455.
